You'll find trrrff! drawing tools and gggreet! sceneplanning tools in the latest Boom box. Besides the standard (and not so standard) goodies like automatic lip-synching, vector and bitmap drawing, painting vector shapes with bitmap textures, 3D scene planning, SWF and QuickTime export, timeline and Exposure Sheet for simplifying movie planning, this full-blown 2D animation package opens up further possibilities. Because Toon Boom Studio is friend to Flash-fiends everywhere. It's the perfect companion app with its swanky yet affordable animation feature-set dedicated to the creation of quality 2D cartoons (yet accessible to the weekend animator who can't draw 12 frames per second per character). With the Toon Boom Studio Importer plug-in, included with the commercial distribution of Flash MX, you can load Toon projects directly into Flash MX and create your own world wild web!

In Toon Boom Studio 2.01 (a free upgrade from 2.0) new features have evolved. Some thumbs up changes include the ability to retain palette information when files are saved—meaning no more fiddling with palettes upon opening a project. You can organize color swatches in palettes for all of the painted elements in your animation. Another timesaver is the ability to create palette styles in order to repaint drawings for various settings. Gradients, transparencies and other effects are at your fingertips. Also new is Unicode support and copying frame properties to multiple key frames. And then there's the endless joy of putting words in their mouths, talking mute characters into becoming verbal creatures. It's gotten better with automatic lip synching; one of those remarkable features wherein the software does a good deal of the grunt work, matching mouth shapes to sounds, and placing them voila! in the appropriate animation frames. Fine-Tooning has never been smoother...

Toon Boom Studio 2 offers a brilliant toolset for a motion mindset.
